Program Leader

Experience

Maurice became fascinated with the power of video while participating in a Communicate to Influence program. “I was taken aback by the concept of disparity—seeing the difference between how people feel in front of the camera and how they actually see themselves on video from the audience’s perspective.” Understanding the profound fear that most persons experience when performing socially and publicly, he believes in creating a safe, intimate setting to elevate and empower all participants. He finds inspiration in the transformational power that the Decker Method has on every individual. He loves to see people grow and thrive, as they embrace more effective processes that shape their new experiences.

Maurice’s background includes public relations, corporate communications, and academia. He has been involved in training and development since his college years in Boston. He is the founder of MTC Consulting, a small consulting firm that develops internal and external communication materials in multiple languages for U.S. multinationals operating in Latin America and Europe, including Avon, AOL, and Enron.

Combining his passion for skiing, scuba diving and other cultures, he has lived and traveled throughout the world. He is fluent in Spanish and French, and has good working knowledge of Portuguese. He currently resides in New York City.

Education

Maurice holds a Bachelor of Arts in Psychology from Northeastern University, and he is a certified Coach Practitioner in Neuro-Linguistic Programming.
