

Leading Remotely for Executives & Managers

Great leaders and managers are struggling to adapt to this new, remote, way of working. The virtual environment takes a higher level of intention, interactivity, and energy to have an impact than in-person communication.

Active participation, not passive observation.

Learn the skills and tools, and immediately improve confidence and abilities, to manage teams effectively over video conference on any platform, calls, webinars, and more.

Teamwork and Cadence

Get your remote teams up and running quickly. Learn when to use video, phone, email, and chat; and best practices for each. Remote working is more than merely using a technology platform more often. Success means leveraging all communication tools at the right time and place.

Establishing Trust Remotely

Leaders and managers need to be a voice of strength and calmness during this transition. Learn how to avoid simple mistakes that can significantly undermine trust in the remote environment. Most importantly, how to listen and make your team members feel heard remotely.

Accountability and Feedback

In an office environment, the number one way leaders passively monitor productivity is simply seeing who is at their desk. That won't work in the virtual world. At the same time, you can't expect your team to be available 24/7—remote workers need the flexibility to balance work and home life.

Engagement

Loneliness is the number one complaint of remote teams and employees, based on peer-reviewed scientific research. Organizational cultures are at considerable risk in a virtual environment if teams aren't healthy and engaged. Learn how to mitigate it and keep employees engaged.
