

The Remote Experience You Create

Team members at every level of an organization are struggling to adapt to this new, remote way of working. The virtual environment requires team members to do everything they were doing before—just more so, and better, and with an entirely new set of tools. In this engaging and live virtual delivery, participants will learn the skills and tools to immediately improve their confidence and abilities when it comes to contributing to the remote environment.

Active participation, not passive observation.

Think of this as an anti-webinar. This is a live, virtually led workshop, unlike anything you or your teams have experienced before.

Teamwork and Cadence

Learn when to use video, phone, email, and chat; and best practices for each. Remote working is more than merely using a technology platform more often. Success means leveraging all communication tools at the right time and place.

Establishing Trust Remotely

Being an excellent team member means engaging with your collaborators, peers, and leaders differently. Learn how to avoid simple mistakes that can significantly undermine trust in the remote environment.

Accountability and Feedback

In an office environment, the number one way individuals passively measure productivity is simply seeing who is at their desk. That won't work in the virtual world. At the same time, you can't expect your colleagues to be available 24/7—remote workers need the flexibility to balance work and home life.

Engagement

Loneliness is the number one complaint of remote teams and employees, based on peer-reviewed scientific research. Organizational cultures are at considerable risk in a virtual environment if teams aren't healthy and engaged. Learn how to manage it and keep employees engaged.
